vate property without permission. The charges are misdemeanors that each carry a maximum $500 fine and six-month jail sentence.

Fitzpatrick would not say whether the police department was seeking to fire Rinaldo for the charges, which are the result of a four-month internal investigation conducted by two sergeants and an assistant deputy police chief.

"Nobody is above the rules and regulations and the public trust," Fitzpatrick said. "We'll pursue the charges, and if after hearing the case the commission agrees with the charges, we'll seek what we think are appropriate sanctions."

Rinaldo's attorney, Cain, said: "This four-month investigation, which started based upon what in the law is a petty offense . . . represents politics at its worst on the local level. Rinaldo has been connected to people outside police administration — such as Tim Simms — so the administration does not politically trust Joe Rinaldo."

Simms, a former Republican state representative and senator, is considering running against Mayor Charles Box, a Democrat. Cain called Rinaldo a dedicated officer who was promoted to head the traffic department on merit and seniority.

"For the chief of police to attempt now to try and terminate a veteran police officer's employment is unconscionable and we won't let that happen."

Fitzpatrick dismissed the charges that politics influenced the investigation. "I'm disappointed in his professionalism, but we'll stick to higher ground and the issues of the case. It's obviously our burden to prove it, and we intend to do it."

Sheriff Casparini declined to comment Monday on the charges against Rinaldo. Fitzpatrick said the sheriff would be called under subpoena to testify at Rinaldo's full hearing when it is scheduled.

Rinaldo was suspended with pay on Dec. 12 pending the internal investigation. He continues to be paid about $1,128 per week.

What's next

This afternoon, the Rockford Board of Fire and Police Commissioners is expected to set a date for a probable cause hearing in Rinaldo's case. A full hearing, the equivalent of an internal trial, would be scheduled within 30 days after the probable cause hearing.

Sex offender notification law

Compulsory laws
New Jersey

Many people know "Megan's Law" as the law that requires sex offenders to register with the state. But in October 1996, in response to the murder of 7-year-old Megan Kanka, who was abducted and raped by a neighbor, New Jersey passed a law that required sex offenders to register with the state.

At first, groups that deal with children say they will make use of the list of child sex offenders. They also say it's not a cure-all.

By the numbers

There are 1,000 sex offenders in New Jersey. Of those, 100 are on the list of child sex offenders. They are required to register with the state and provide information about their whereabouts.
